Afterword by Robert Macfarlane is a beautifully written and deeply personal exploration of the relationship between literature and landscape.

Macfarlane, one of the UK's leading nature writers, takes us on a journey through some of the most iconic landscapes in British literature, from the Highlands of Scotland to the coast of Cornwall. Macfarlane's writing is lyrical and evocative, and he has a gift for capturing the essence of a place in words. He describes the "wild and beautiful" Highlands of Scotland as "a land of mountains and lochs, of heather and bracken, of eagles and deer." He writes of the "rugged and unforgiving" coast of Cornwall as "a place of cliffs and coves, of storms and shipwrecks, of legends and myths." And he captures the "serene and timeless" beauty of the Lake District as "a land of lakes and fells, of woods and waterfalls, of sheep and birds."

Macfarlane's journey through these landscapes is also a journey through the history of British literature. He shows us how writers from Shakespeare to Wordsworth to Hardy have been inspired by the natural world, and how their work has shaped our understanding of landscape.

Afterword is a book that will appeal to anyone who loves literature, nature, or travel. It is a beautifully written and thought-provoking exploration of the relationship between these three things, and it is sure to stay with you long after you have finished reading it.
