The students arrived in the village and were greeted by the chief and the villagers. They were given a tour of the village and learned about the people's way of life. They also learned about the importance of water to the village.

The students were shocked to learn that the villagers had to walk for hours each day to get water from a nearby river. The water was often contaminated and made the villagers sick. The students knew that they had to help.

The students worked hard to build the well. They dug a deep hole and then lined it with rocks. They also installed a pump so that the villagers could easily get water.

The well was a success! The villagers were so grateful to the students for their help. They now had access to clean water, which would improve their health and their quality of life.

Chapter 4: The Friendship
