Her life and career were dedicated to fighting for gender equality and justice for all. This comprehensive biography explores the extraordinary journey of this remarkable woman, from her early days as a young girl in Brooklyn to her groundbreaking accomplishments on the nation's highest court.

Ruth Bader was born in Brooklyn, New York, on March 15, 1933. Her father was a Russian immigrant who worked as a furrier, and her mother was a first-generation American who worked as a garment worker. Ruth excelled academically throughout her childhood. She attended James Madison High School in Brooklyn, where she was a star student and an active member of the debate team. After graduating high school, Ruth enrolled at Cornell University, where she majored in government.

Legal Career

After graduating from Cornell in 1954, Ruth married fellow law student Martin Ginsburg. The couple moved to New York City, where Ruth enrolled at Columbia Law School. She graduated first in her class in 1959.

In 1963, she co-founded the Women's Rights Project at the American Civil Liberties Union (ACLU), which became a leading advocate for women's rights.

In 1972, Ruth became the first woman to teach on the faculty of Columbia Law School. She also continued to work on behalf of the ACLU, arguing several landmark cases that challenged gender discrimination in the Supreme Court.

Supreme Court Justice

In 1980, President Jimmy Carter nominated Ruth Bader Ginsburg to the Supreme Court. She was the first woman to serve as a justice on the court, and her confirmation was a major victory for the women's rights movement.

As a Supreme Court Justice, Ruth frequently found herself in the minority, but she never wavered in her commitment to justice and equality. She wrote numerous dissenting opinions that have since become influential in shaping the law. Ruth was also a strong advocate for the rights of women, minorities, and the poor.
